The hybrid has a blue flower, but several cases were noted in which the entire buds or portions of inflorescences produced white flowers. These white sports, when self-fertilized, produced white flowers only, in the preliminary tests cited. Similar vegetative splitting is known in Datura hybrids, being seen by Naudin in 3 individuals only, while sports of this character of Brassica, Raphanus, Abies, Anagallis, Helianthemum, Zea, and Cytisus are well known. Nearly all other sports of hybrids are clearly of an atavistic nature, being more or less direct reversions, sometimes rehearsing the juvenile characters of one of the parents of the hybrids. A second instance was offered by a form known as O. ammophila. This material was grown from seeds obtained from Professor W. O. Focke, which had been collected on the coast near Bremen, Germany. A large number of seeds were sown in sterilized soil in the propagating house on February 10, 1905. A month later the seedlings obtained were examined and a dozen representing the widest visible range of variation were transferred to pots, while the remainder of the culture was discarded. With successive repottings the number of individuals was reduced to 7, which were transplanted to the experimental garden in the latter part of May, at which time no differences of moment were noticed. During the summer 3 of the specimens sent up shoots, while the other 4 formed dense rosettes with a few short lateral branches. About the middle of...
