B-272540 emphasized the need to approach payment reengineering as a long-term effort focusing on continual improvement and viewing contract payments as part of the total acquisition process. The outcome of their reengineering efforts, according to these organizations, combined technological improvements with streamlined processes and included: consolidating and centralizing payment organizations; developing fully integrated automated systems and using electronic data interchange; implementing simplified processes, to include eliminating one of three documents typically used to make a payment; and using alternative procurement practices, such as use of purchase cards, for smaller purchases. More details on the results of our visits to four nonfederal organizations is discussed in appendix I. Two of the private-sector organizations we visited had available processing costs. They reported that reengineering reduced their direct labor costs to process a contract payment to less than 3 - a 30-to 50-percent reduction. Moreover, the organizations we visited reported that payment...
