Time has also left its impress; slowly but surely the massive rock is being worn away, and in 1850 a large portion of the Table Rock was precipitated into the gulf with a crash that was heard for miles from the scene. Perhaps the best description of Niagara Falls ever written is from the pen of Charles Dickens: - For the first time I heard the mighty rush of water, and felt the ground tremble underneath my feet. The bank is very steep, and was slippery with rain and half-melted ice; but I was soon at the bottom, defaneed by the noise, half blinded by the spray, and wet to the skin. We were at the foot of the American Fall. I could see an immense torrent of water tearing headlong down from some great height, but had no idea of shape, or situation, or anything but vague immensity.
