Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Ocular Accommodation Charles Sheard was born in Dolgeville, New York, May 27th, 1883, and was the first born of the Rev. Dr. Charles and Frances Emily Sheard. During his boyhood days he lived in Richfield Springs, Cape Vincent and Clayton, in the State of New York. His elementary education was finished in the schools of Canton, New York; in 1899 he was graduated from the Canton High School. He received the baccalaureate degrees from St. Lawrence University in 1903. After teaching in the public schools for two years, he entered Dartmouth College as an assistant in physics, where he remained until 1907, receiving at that time the master of arts degree. In the fall of that year he was appointed an instructor in physics at the Ohio State University and in 1910 was appointed assistant professor in the same institution. The year 1912 was spent at Princeton University, from which institution he was sent out with the highest scholastic degree granted by universities, the degree of doctor of philosophy, having presented original theses along the modern electronic theory of matter. In 1914 he played an important part in the establishment of the work in Applied Optics at the Ohio State University and became in that year the first director and professor of Applied Optics. These years spent at the Ohio University were productive of much research work and many a page of writing. The period of the world war found him physically incapacitated but he served in a civilian capacity in optical work as well as carrying out his duties as an instructor and as a clinician at the University. In 1919 the subject of...
